Spring 2018
Hours of instruction M 4:30-6:50
Classroom TBD

Language socialization research investigates how the processes of linguistic, cultural, and social development are interlinked, and how these processes vary across contexts. Researchers using the language socialization framework seek to understand

- How people learn to use language in the specific ways that enable them to participate in a particular group or community
- How participants in socializing interactions (re)shape codes and contexts
- How micro everyday and macro socio-cultural phenomena are interconnected in processes of human development and learning-teaching

Course Objectives

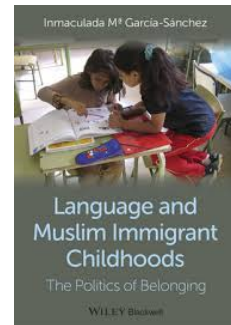

In this seminar you will

- 1) Learn about and learn to engage critically and creatively with language socialization research – theory and methodology, core topics and questions, findings and insights, challenges and opportunities.
- 2) Explore how the language socialization framework relates to your own research interests.
- 3) Develop your scholarly skills in reading, writing, presenting, and designing research.

READINGS

We will read journal articles, a monograph, and selected chapters from 2 edited volumes.

All 3 books are available through OSU Libraries as e-books

We will also use Grad School Essentials: A Crash Course in Scholarly Skills. We will engage with this how-to book as learners and as language socialization scholars.

If you have any questions about the course and/or how it might fit with your current research interests and activities, please contact Dr. Moore. Some course assignments may be modified to fit your ongoing research.
