Children's Acquisition of Grammatical Variation

Patterns of grammatical variation are highly systematic among adults (Labov 1994, Poplack 2018, Tagliamonte 2012). Nevertheless, we still know very little about how such patterns develop during childhood. In this talk, I present Shin and Miller's (2021) four-stage developmental pathway for the acquisition of morphosyntactic variation. We propose that the pathway involves first producing only one of the variable forms (Stage 1), producing both forms but in mutually-exclusive contexts (Stage 2), then producing both forms in some overlapping contexts (Stage 3), and finally producing both forms in more contexts (Stage 4). We argue that the developmental pathway is shaped by both input effects as well as various tendencies that children evince in the face of variable input, including regularization and assigning different meanings to different forms.

Language Policy and Afro-Hispanic Linguistics: Current Issues in Afro-Bolivian Spanish

During the past two decades, some Afro-Hispanic languages have slowly entered the process of official recognition in Latin America (Dijkhoff & Pereira 2010; Lipski 2010). Recent publications on Afro-Bolivian Spanish (Lipski 2008, Sessarego 2011, 2014, 2021) have triggered an important process of language pride and revitalization among the members of the Afro-Bolivian community. Afro-Bolivians have recently taken a new look at their traditional language, which was previously regarded by many as a sort of embarrassing "broken Spanish". The local attitudes toward this variety have greatly changed. Among other initiatives, Afro-Bolivians have created the Instituto de Lengua y Cultura Afroboliviano with the aim of promoting and revitalizing their language, which is now perceived as a symbol of cultural and ethnic pride. This paper critically reviews the process Afro-Bolivian Spanish is going through; it also discusses opportunities and threats that this variety may face, within the current political scenario, to acquire visibility, recognition and, potentially, a new role in society.
